Comments on Proposed Rulemaking for Member Business Loans, Part 723.

Dear Gerard Poliquin:

I am writing in response to the proposed changes that would greatly expand business lending within the credit union industry. I am deeply concerned about the manner in which this proposal has been extended and about the potentially negative impact that it would have.

NCUA's proposal poses serious safety and soundness concerns. NCUA has not established that it is prepared to supervise institutions with expanding business loan portfolios, and the credit union industry has proven ill-equipped to make such loans. At least five credit unions since 2010 have failed at the hands of poorly run business loan programs, accounting for a quarter of all losses to the insurance fund during that period. In 2010, member business loans were the primary or secondary contributing factor for the supervisory concern for nearly half of the credit unions with CAMEL ratings of 3, 4 or 5 that made business loans. The level of delinquent member business loans dramatically rose from 0.53 percent in 2006 to 4.29 percent in 2010; compared to a total loan delinquency of 1.74 percent, this is a clear indication that credit unions, and NCUA itself, were ill-prepared for the additional responsibilities and risks associated with commercial lending. Losses could quickly multiply under this proposed rule.

In addition, relaxing the regulatory standards is contrary to NCUA's charge of protecting the industry's insurance fund, and effectively places the taxpayer at risk. NCUA is willfully ignoring lessons from their history and encouraging credit unions to divert funds from consumer lending to commercial lending.

NCUA is overstepping its regulatory reach by expanding business lending loopholes. This proposal is contrary to congressional intent to limit business lending by credit unions. In 1998, Congress made it clear that credit unions should be focused on consumer lending, not commercial lending. Congress instituted restrictions on business lending deliberately: "to ensure that credit unions continue to fulfill their specified mission of meeting the credit and savings needs of consumers, especially persons of modest means, through an emphasis on consumer rather than business loans." By proposing this rule, the NCUA Board has blatantly disregarded congressional intent. NCUA should not undermine specific limitations by Congress nor expand the taxpayer liability.

Credit Unions hold a particularly strong market share here in Wyoming, and these proposed changes appear to potentially exploit their tax exempt status by allowing more extensive commercial lending in a manner that exceeds their original mandate. These expanded rules could allow for the additional origination, sale or syndication of complex commercial credits by financial institutions without the appropriate experience in the commercial loan area, and without the appropriate safeguards and structure necessary for commercial loans.

The bank I work for has a longstanding proven track record demonstrating the ability to properly underwrite and administer commercial loans in a prudent and sound manner. We are proud of our ability to serve the banking needs of our business customers, and are concerned that these new rules could allow unsafe lending by financial entities that do not have the appropriate level of experience or controls to become involved with a higher level of commercial loans and syndications.

Sincerely,
Richard Robertson Melone
