Gerard Poliquin:

I would ask that you consider the impact of requiring all credit unions to have office space out of the home. This country was founded and continues to thrive on small business. The largest of businesses have started in their home, including the likes of Apple, Microsoft, Amazon, Google, Mattel and many others. If they weren't afforded the opportunity to thrive small, they may not be around today.

I imagine many of the credit unions in their home will shutter if required to spend money on office space. Please reconsider this measure.

With that said, I understand some of the concerns surround the, "safety in the home". I suggest the measures that you take up surround just that and not taking successful businesses out of their home.

Thank you for your consideration.
