Dear Mr. Poliquin:

I am a Volunteer Director of Langley Federal Credit Union. I am writing today to offer some comments on the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA) proposed risk-based capital rule. I appreciate the opportunity to provide my thoughts on what I consider to be a far-reaching regulatory proposal and to express some of my concerns about the potential negative impact of the proposed rule on credit unions.

In general, I support a conservative approach to capital reform. Risk-based capital for credit unions has been on the table for a number of years. My concern is that the current proposal is overly conservative and unwarranted given the superb recent history of credit union performance in total.

This regulation, as proposed, treats all credit unions as if they were all bad players without regard to their size, the level of experience within the organization and most importantly the past performance during difficult times.

The implementation of risk-based capital should be part of an overall capital and prompt corrective action reform. This should include lower leverage ratios for well and adequately capitalized credit unions, as well as authority for supplemental capital for federally insured credit unions.

Most importantly, no rule should afford any greater authority for an individual examiner to impose additional capital requirements on a case-by-case basis. It is absolutely essential that credit unions understand clearly what their capital and net worth expectations will be. An examiner should never be allowed to increase a credit union's individual risk-based capital requirement subjectively.

Finally, the effective date of the final rule implementation should be no sooner than the end of year 2018. Once the regulation is final credit union earnings will have to be balanced with the risk weighting of the assets. Some investments will have to be shortened. Some loans will have to be divested - or at least the position in those loan categories adjusted.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on this proposed regulation. I support the efforts of NCUA to pursue a balanced risk-based capital system that requires additional capital of higher risk credit unions and rewards those credit unions with proven risk management skills. I encourage NCUA to suspend implementation of this new regulation until improvements to the regulation can be made to address the many concerns raised by the trade associations and dedicated industry volunteers and professionals.

Respectfully Submitted,

Joyce M. Wright, Director
